Battle Leadership Toc

The tactical operations center is the collective brain behind any battlefield operation. From headquarters at the battalion, up to a corps (and often higher), the TOC is a bustling network of Soldiers, computers, projectors and charts. It's where staff sections come together to issue orders and make battlefield decisions. It's almost a supercomputer of officers and NCOs working together to ...

A well-run TOC, the CALL paper says, doesn't have battle captains doing subordinate duties on a regular basis. The battle captain and XO have important, demanding leadership roles. Taking on little tasks that should be left to NCOs distracts from the big picture and can leave a battle captain too tired to
