Some folks will use another (powered) light source down here, but I find the reflector to be much simpler to set up, and it also has the virtue of being idiot proof. For example, if you have another light instead of a reflector below the subject, and you accidentally overpower it (so it is more powerful than the main light), you have created ...

The light at the top of the sketch plan shows the back light. This is a Lupolux LED 1000 in full-spot mode rigged two floors up and pointing down over the balustrade. The third light in the set is lighting the back wall. I used another Lupolux 1000 LED and a ScatterGel on the right at the top of the stairs.
